LAUGH a LOT

Where is He?

They had just moved into the nice fine neighborhood in the suburbs. His parents wanted him to make friends. By that they meant the right kind of friends. Which was one of the main reasons that her uncle had died and left her the modern house.

It was Saturday and the kitchen clock showed the hour to be almost 12. She was worried. Her son had a good appetite and had not as yet returned home. So she went outside and stopped a boy.

"Have you seen my son?" she asked.

"What's his name?" was the reply.

"Frederick Blansville Johnson III," she said very proudly.

"Naw," was the one word reply of the youngster.

She stopped three other boys and asked them the same question. And each reply was in the negative. Perhaps he could be at a neighbor's house? But she was sensible to know that the mother of the other boy would call her on the phone. She went to her purse and took out a picture of her beloved little boy. Then she went outside again. She was really worried. Perhaps she should call the police. She saw another boy.

"I wonder if you saw my son," she asked in a pleading tone of voice. "His name is Frederick Blansville Johnson III. Here is a picture of him."

The boy took the picture and studied it carefully. Then he smiled as he spoke.

"So that's his name! We call him Blubber. Best tackle on our football team. He's over at the school playground."

The Price of Chops

"I love you very much," he told her. "But I just can't afford to get married. I am junior executive number 76 and that means there are 75 men ahead of me waiting for the big job."

"But I know how to shop," she insisted. "I can stretch a dollar so it will do the work of two dollars. I will prove to you that even in these days of high prices, two people can live as cheaply as one."

So they were married and he gave her a weekly budget to prove she was a good shopper. There were times when she spent $10.00 worth of gas and oil to save just 50 cents. But let's skip that incident. She would compare the price of every item in every store in the vicinity. And she only bought bargains.

"If every woman was like her," sighed the owner of the Best Meat Shop," I would either go broke or crazy.

On this particular day she went shopping for lamb chops. And she looked amazed when told that first cut were $1.75 a pound. "Only difference between you and Jesse James is that he had a horse," she told him.

So she went to another butcher store and asked the price.

"Only 70 cents a pound," said the butcher with a smile.

"I will then take five pounds at that price," she informed him.

"But I am out of them," he told her. Doing his best not to smile.

So she went back to the owner of the Best Meat Shop and told him about the low price of lamb chops in his competitor's store.

"But why didn't you buy them there?" he said.

"Because he was out of them," she explained.

"Well, when I am out of them, I sell them for 20 cents a pound," he grinned.

●●●●●●

Smart Bird?

He was Professor of Romance Languages at the State University. And now he had a chance of a lifetime. To purchase a chicken that spoke English, French, German, and Swedish. And could also count the numbers from one to a million.

"I have used the bird in my magician's act," explained the seller. "And now I am retiring. So if you are willing to give me three thousand dollars, the bird is yours. Believe me, you are getting a bargain."

The Professor spoke to the bird in the different languages and was satisfied he really had something unusual. He wrote out the check for that amount and the bird was now his. But what to do with it until time to go home? He turned to his secretary.

"Take the bird to my home. Tell my mother to take care of it. I will be home for supper at the usual time."

He had a busy afternoon. But was very happy at the bargain he had bought. When he came home his mother told him the news.

"I gave the cook the day off. I wanted to surprise you. Just wait until you taste the chicken soup I made for you."

Suddenly his intuition began to work and he felt a chill run down his spine.

"Where did you get the chicken for the soup?" he asked her.

"You were such a good son," she replied. "Sent home a live chicken."

"Mother," he explained "That was the smartest chicken in the entire world. Could speak four languages. Knew mathematics."

"If it was so smart," retorted his mother. "It could have told me who it was."
